Reed Hoffman

With a presentation on using Flash for your photography.

Many photographers say, "I only use available light." I do too, and that includes flash. Understanding how to create light, with an accessory flash, will let you not only make better pictures, but create pictures that otherwise wouldn't exist. Join us as Reed Hoffmann gives an introduction to off-camera flash, from simple one-light shoots to more complicated multiple light shots.

Reed's won many national awards for his photography and been named a Nikon Legend Behind the Lens, a Microsoft Icon of Imaging and Lexar Pro Elite photographer. You can see his work at www.ReedHoffmann.com and galleries of past workshops he's taught (many for Popular Photography's Mentor Series) at ReedHoffmann.com/past-trips/

Sensor Cleaning

Club member Mark Greenberg was nice enough to send in his experience w/ getting his camera sensor clean w/a local company:

"Earlier this year, I noticed that all my images were showing a great number of sensor dust spots. Much time was spent in post processing getting rid of these photo spots. My attempts to clean the sensor with various cleaning aids in my Nikon D800 were not at all successful and may have made the situation worse. After some inquiries, I was directed to a business called ELECTRONIC SERVICES. They charge a nonrefundable fee for evaluating the camera. That fee is applied toward any charges incurred for further work. All my camera needed was a thorough sensor cleaning so my final total expense was about $62.00. The sensor was perfectly clean and my images were spotless. I have decided that sensor cleaning is like owning a house—a certain budget should be allocated for yearly maintenance."

DD&B Flickr Group

For any Flickr users, be aware that there is now a Digital Dimensions Flickr Group. We would encourage any members with Flickr accounts to join & post to that group, specifically photos that were taken at or related to DD&B field trips or meetings. The group can be found here.

Flickr is a great place to show your photos and is an excellent resource for gathering feedback & for getting questions answered. It has a huge number of very active groups on almost any photography topic or subject you can think of and is worth checking out.
